

Ladies' Home Journal Patterns

We want the people of Barre and vicinity to know what one of the greatest dry goods merchants in the world has to say for the Ladies' Home Journal Patterns, he having discarded the Butterick Patterns for them on the second of July. We give you a portion of his first adv. on them.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL PATTERNS ON SALE AT WANAMAKER'S

The tremendous demand for these excellent Patterns, which has been built up among the readers of The Ladies' Home Journal, required an investigation by us of the merits claimed for them by their publishers. After the complete test by our experts their merits were fully established.

The Patterns show unusual beauty and progressiveness of style, accuracy of cut in all the sizes, and the "Guide Chart" which goes with each Pattern makes it especially easy for the home dressmaker to work with them.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

When they can get agencies placed in such stores it proves that the Patterns must have great merit, as we know they have from the fact that our sales have doubled over the Butterick sales when we had that agency.

A complete stock of the Ladies' Home Journal Patterns now on sale. Prices, 40c and 15c.

"The Ladies' Home Journal Style Book" issued monthly, will be distributed without charge to those who call for it at the store.

Don't fail to get some of the great values we are giving in the Suit Department. We are going to give you some surprises. Keep an eye on this space.

WINDOW CLEANING.

Item of Expense That Mounts Up In the Case of Big Buildings.

The cost of having house or apartment windows of ordinary size cleaned by professional window cleaners is about 10 cents a window. So a man living, say, in an apartment having ten windows would pay $1 for having his windows cleaned; if he had them cleaned twice a month $2 and if once a week $4 a month—not a matter of very serious moment.

But when it comes to big buildings, with many windows, the window cleaning question may easily be a very different proposition. The most recently opened of the city's great modern hotels has about 3,500 windows. Obviously if it cost 10 cents each to have these windows cleaned the cost of a single cleaning of them would be $350.

If they were cleaned twice a month at that cost the expense would be $700 a month, or $8,400 a year, and to clean them once a week at 10 cents a window would cost annually $18,200.

As a matter of fact, the expense is much less than that, but still the actual cost of the work done partly by contract and partly by the hotel's own labor, amounts to a sum that many a man would be glad to have for a salary or to have added to his annual income.

The cleaning of the windows of this great hotel from the ground floor up to and including the parlor floor is done by contract by a window cleaning concern. On the twenty floors above the parlor floor the window cleaning is done by men employed on the several floors, a man on each looking after the windows on that floor.

For its part of the work the window cleaning concern sends eight men, and the number of men employed by the hotel that work on the windows on the higher floors is twenty. Thus it takes a considerable part of the time of twenty-eight men to keep the windows of the hotel in order, and the annual cost of the work of this one simple item of window cleaning is here about $4,500.—New York Sun.

ALUMINUM TODAY.

The successful chemical processes for aluminum, which were all based upon the reduction of salts of aluminum with sodium, and were simply modifications of the method used by Wohler in 1827. When he first discovered the metal, brought first and foremost in the train the remarkable cheapening in the manufacture of sodium; because, unless sodium could be obtained at a low cost it was impossible to manufacture aluminum cheaply. However, by purely chemical processes it was never found possible to produce aluminum below about 28 shillings per kilo, but at the end of 1891, soon after the advent of successful electrolytic processes, it had fallen to 5 shillings, and at the present day it is rather less than 2 shillings per kilo.

To the brothers Cowles, of America, belongs the honor of first producing a working furnace in which they were able, by electrical and electrolytic methods, to obtain alloys of aluminum with other metals, by striking an arc in a mixture of bauxite and oxide of iron or other metal. The Heroult seems to have been the first furnace in which a fused aluminum salt—cryolite—was actually electrolyzed on a commercial scale, and modifications of this furnace are at the present day among the most successful which are employed, and the one worked by the British aluminum company at Foyers is a Heroult.

The production of aluminum is essentially one of electrolysis, but it is also electrothermic insofar as the passage of the current serves to keep the bath molten. The bath usually consists in the first place of fused cryolite, and as the electrolysis continues the loss of aluminum is replaced by additions of aluminum fluoride or of alumina. If the bath were regenerated by continual additions of cryolite, in time the quantity of sodium fluoride would become excessive and sodium and not aluminum would be yielded up at the cathode.

Most authorities consider that in a bath which is regenerated with alumina the alumina and not the fluoride which undergoes electrolysis, and that the fluorine given up at the anode continuously reproduces cryolite. Aluminum is perhaps of more general use in the form of its alloys than in the pure condition. We see that M. Minet mentions its use in the pure state for surgical instruments—woe betide these instruments if antiseptized in chloride.—London Nature.
